

Gaming Corps signs multi-million dollar deal with PDP

The independent game developer Gaming Corps will act as a subcontractor to PDP. Developing a game with an order value of $ 2.69 million (approximately SEK 21.4 million).

Gaming Corps (Nasdaq: GCOR) and PDP deepen the collaboration through a new deal where Gaming Corps will develop a game based on the prototype the company previously developed. The order value of the assignment amounts to $ 2.69 million.

PDP is the world's largest third party hardware supplier and today works with brands like Rockband and Infineon. The new project is based on Gaming Corps game idea in combination with PDP's new hardware. The new hardware will be launched in 2018.

"We see it as a huge quality stamp that PDP has chosen to give us the confidence to be responsible for their new game project. The prototype we developed earlier this year was made in competition with other studios that had the same chance, and Gaming Corps went victoriously from that match. It goes without saying that we feel extremely proud," says Gaming Corps CEO Magnus Kolaas.

The current game is estimated to take 12 months to complete.
