

Breakfast seminar, part two:

US and European relationship: a perspective from our future leaders

Ever since the end of the Second World War, one defining factor of international relations has been the close partnership between the US and Europe. But since the fall of the Berlin wall and particularly after the events of 9/11 one could see a shift in the transatlantic relationship. At the same time the main focus of US security has been towards the Middle East and the importance of Europe has somewhat diminished. What kind of transatlantic relationship does the next generation see? What are the future challenges? And what is the concern of their generation that might drive change?

Folk och Försvar, in collaboration with the US Embassy in Stockholm, organizes a series of breakfast seminars during the spring of 2012 on the challenges of the US and the relationship between the US and Europe. You are cordially invited to the second seminar in this series.

Date: Wednesday 2 May 2012

Venue: Folk och Försvar, Lilla Nygatan 14 (entréplan) i Stockholm

PROGRAMME

Moderator: Lena Bartholdson, Folk och Försvar

- 09:00 Breakfast is being served
- 09:30 Transatlantic reflections
Jennifer Cunningham, PhD Student, International Studies, Old Dominion University
Scott Duryea, PhD Candidate, International Studies, Old Dominion University
Hanna Wagenius, Chairperson, Young Center Party
Mattias Kristenson, Board member, Social Democratic Youth League
- 10:00 Reflections and discussion
- 11:00 End of seminar