About F shares

To provide access to US investors who prefer to see quotes in US dollars during their regular trading hours and to facilitate trade reporting, broker-dealers create trading symbols, or tickers, of foreign securities in the US. These tickers are 5 letters long and end with the letter "F". As such, they are traditionally called F shares. More than 2,000 companies with primary listings on more than 30 global markets have an F share on OTC Markets. US broker-dealers continuously price F shares in accordance with local market share price movements and available liquidity. While trades are executed in US dollars by US broker-dealers, the shares are normally settled, cleared and custodized in the local market. As such, trading of an F share in the US increases the overall global liquidity for the company's shares.
