

The Loudon-clear guide to... ADAC Rallye Deutschland

Sébastien Ogier's been waiting a while for this. Since Sweden, in fact. The world championship-topping Frenchman has been made to suffer for his success, but 10 days of road sweeping are done and the lead remains intact. On Friday morning, half a season's frustration will be forgotten when he launches his Polo R WRC at Mittelmosel with a vengeance.

Regardless which side of the running order debate you sit, this week's ADAC Rallye Deutschland is going to be a fascinating opportunity to see what a level playing field provides after six different winners from seven rallies.

That level playing field is, of course, weather dependent. If the rain comes – and it has been known on more than one occasion in the Mosel valley – then the advantage will sit with Sébastien.

And it would take a brave man to deny him that.

I'm delighted to say I'm joining Ma Qinghua for the recce in Trier this week. Making pacenotes on these asphalt roads was the latest stage in Ma's preparations for next month's now cancelled Rally China.

Last year...

Redemption for Volkswagen! Finally, the Germans win in Germany. The team was forgiven for not winning its home round in its first full season in the World Rally Championship; there was even a degree of good humour at the fact Trier was the only place the squad really slipped up. When, 12 months on, ADAC Rallye Deutschland was the only event missing from the list of 2014 victories for the Frankfurt squad, the situation was all the more serious. Last year, everything was well again. The Polo players were simply sublime and went one-two-three after a trouble-free and untouchable run at home.

Stuart Loudon's key stage: SS10 Panzerplatte Lang 1 25.35 miles (40.80km)

Realise this might be a little bit obvious, but this is the one which could change the face of the event. It's not just because it's the longest stage of the rally, it's because it's, well... it's Panzerplatte: it's the hinkelsteins, the junctions, the surface changes, the weather, it's everything rolled into one to make this one of the season's toughest tests. It's a Tarmac Motu*. Why this one, not the second run? The first loop includes marginally more mileage (an extra run at the Arena stage) and, if the temperature's knocking on the door of 30, tyre wear could be critical.

Stuart will be watching... #4 Dani Sordo/Marc Marti (Hyundai i20 WRC)

Kevin Abbring and Seb Marshall deputised for the Spaniards brilliantly last time out in Finland, but their Hyundai team-mates are off the bench and back for Trier. The fractured vertebrae Sordo suffered in his Finland test crash is all fixed and this is an event where Dani can, should, and likely will, fly. He took his maiden WRC win here in 2013 and nothing would give him more pleasure than a second success on Sunday. Let's see what he can do.

Weather with you:

When the sun's shining we're going to be looking at mid-20s, but when the rain comes expect that temperature to drop to around 20. Thinking is: dry Friday, wet weekend. But this is the Mosel valley, in meteorological terms, anything can happen!

Stuart's restaurant recommendation:

Don't bother with a restaurant. Stay in the service park, buy yourself a bratwurst and wash it down with a couple of pints of cracking German ale. Providing the weather's warm, there's always a great party atmosphere in the service park, particularly once the band gets going!

Stuart Loudon is a semi-professional co-driver who has started 84 rallies, 18 of which are rounds of the World Rally Championship and one of which was with an Ashes-winning English cricketer. He makes biscuits in the family business when he's not working towards his dream of becoming a factory co-driver in the WRC.
