Humana top-listed as one of the most gender-balanced listed companies in Sweden

Humana keeps its position as one of the most gender-balanced listed companies in Sweden. When the Allbright Prize 2020 was awarded today, Humana was one of the three finalists.

"I am both happy and proud that we were one of the finalists for yet another year when Sweden's most gender-balanced listed company was awarded. I personally, together with Humana's Group Management and the entire Humana Group, deem gender equality and diversity as important factors for a long-term sustainable and successful company", Rasmus Nerman, President and CEO of Humana, said.

The Allbright Prize is awarded each year to the most gender-balanced company at Nasdaq Stockholm. Humana has previously, in 2018 and 2017, been awarded the Allbright Prize. This year, Humana ended up as one of the three finalists along with the research company Bioarctic and the investment company Kinnevik. Rasmus Nerman appreciates that there are several companies that excel when it comes to gender equality.

"I would like to warmly congratulate Bioarctic on being awarded the prize as the most gender-balanced listed company in Sweden in 2020. The company, like Humana, has been a finalist before and has made a fantastic journey to achieve this. Congratulations also to Kinnevik that really has taken a step forward with the company's gender equality work. It is an honor to end up in the final with these two fellow competitors", Rasmus Nerman said.

Behind the Allbright Prize stands Allbright, a politically independent and non-profit foundation that works for gender equality and diversification among leading executives in the business life.

"The fact that Humana is in the final for the third time is a measure of quality in itself. It is clear that the company is committed to gender equality. Far from all companies are being successful in this work our latest Allbright report shows", Amanda Lundeteg, Allbright's CEO, said,
