Like previous impact reports from Loudspring, the impact assessment for 2018 estimates how much water and greenhouse gas (GHG) emissions were saved or 'avoided' through the operations of a select number of Loudspring portfolio companies. The full report goes into much more detail about this method for measuring impact, as well as the recently released Loudspring Impact Review and Methodology document that was released earlier this year. You can read the Loudspring Impact Review and Methodology here: https://loudspring.earth/files/Loudspring_Literature_Review_18.pdf

This year's Impact Results from Loudspring also adds for the first time reference of the Loudspring portfolio to biodiversity impacts and also the Sustainable Development Goals. It was found that the Loudspring portfolio impacts 8 of the 17 UN Sustainable Development Goals.

CEO of Loudspring, Lassi Noponen comments:

"This is the third impact report from us as a company group and it is by far the most comprehensive yet, with references to the Sustainable Development Goals and biodiversity. Reporting impact is still in its infancy for most companies, but I believe that it will only become expected that businesses measure and report their impacts as climate concerns increase and more stress is put on natural resources."

"I am happy that Loudspring can take a leadership position in this space, but I am also very happy that we are able to share our methods openly through events like our Impact Evening with Spark Sustainability tonight in Helsinki."
