Energy Efficiency Consultancy EECO2 receives Green Deal Certification

For free and immediate distribution

One of the leading Energy Efficiency Consultancies EECO2 has become a Certified Green Deal Advisor
Service for the Government's Green Deal Scheme

The certification was carried out by Quidos which is one of the leading bodies for providing training and certification for organisations delivering the Green Deal Advice Service.

The Green Deal Advisor service provided by EECO2 includes Energy Performance Certificates and Occupancy assessments which will ultimately make up the Green Deal report and recommendations.

A Green Deal assessment is the first step for consumers to enter into a Green Deal plan. An EECO2 Advisor will provide Green Deal customers with a thorough assessment on their properties and make recommendations for measures that could improve the energy efficiency of the building.

Through Quidos, EECO2 have been certified as having the technical knowledge, practical competence and skills to provide consumers with the advice they need in order to make informed decisions.

Since receiving Green Deal certification, EECO2 have launched an informative blog to highlight the latest updates surrounding the scheme and will provide advice and guidance about the process for business and homeowners alike.

Founding Director Rob Wallace said:

"At EECO2, we believe that the Green Deal is a fantastic way for property owners to contribute to energy and carbon reduction through energy savings made within their property. By extending our offering to include Green Deal Assessment we can assist businesses and homeowners in taking up measures that will ultimately reduce their impact upon the environment through improved energy efficiency."

Separately, EECO2 use their acquired experience & knowledge to provide cost effective, energy & emission reduction solutions from initial opportunity identification through implementation & verification of savings.
