

Crunchfish CEO in panel discussion on offline payments at ITU DC3 conference

Crunchfish CEO Joachim Samuelsson participated as an expert panellist in the panel discussion on “The importance of offline payments for CBDCs and financial inclusion” at the DC3 Conference organised by the Digital Currency Global Initiative by International Telecommunications Union and the Future of Digital Currency Initiative at Stanford University. Crunchfish Digital Cash was positioned as the internet of payments with similar inclusion, resilience and privacy for digital payments as the internet provides for information sharing.

Crunchfish CEO Joachim Samuelsson participated as an expert panellist on a webinar on the topic The Importance of offline payments for CBDCs and financial inclusion. Joachim Samuelsson positioned Crunchfish Digital Cash as being designed using the same robust design principles as the internet. The idea was published in a press release Crunchfish Digital Cash is the Internet of Payments with similar inclusion, resilience and privacy for digital payments as the internet does for information sharing.

The International Telecommunication Union (ITU) was organising the second edition of the DC3 Conference – 24 – 27 January 2023. The DC3 Conference is part of the activities of the Digital Currency Global Initiative which is a joint collaboration between the ITU and the Future of Digital Currency Initiative at Stanford University.

Last week, on January 19th, Crunchfish released in partnership with Lipis Advisors the first whitepaper in a new whitepaper series “Enabling Offline Payments in an Online World” with a focus on practical offline payments design. It was followed by a webinar where the whitepaper was first presented by Bonni Brodsky at Lipis Advisors and then followed by a panel discussion with Beju Shah, Head of the Nordic Innovation Hub at Bank of International Settlement and Crunchfish CEO Joachim Samuelsson.
