Scandinavian ChemoTech delivers the first IQwave™ to Kenya and certifies the first African Oncologist

ChemoTech has now completed the delivery of the IQwave™ in the order received earlier this year. An order that was established by the company's distributor Nobbledrug Healthcare Services (NDHS).

Today ChemoTech and NDHS performed the first training and certification of the D-EECT treatment in Africa. The training took place at one of the larger government referral hospitals in Kenya.

” This is an important mile-stone in our African strategy” says the CEO Mohan Frick, who attended todays training. “Starting a market access in a totally new region, by establishing a government tender is remarkable, and not seen that often. From here, we can start building a strong relation to the hospitals and physicians that works for the government in Kenya and hopefully we will establish more and larger tenders in the future. It’s important to establish good relations with physicians that can partner with us, partners that can train and certify other local physicians in the region.”
