

Svenska Aerogel is officially certified as a sustainable and healthy workplace

Svenska Aerogel is now officially certified by Healthy Place To Work Sweden as a sustainable and healthy workplace. Healthy Place To Work is the global standard for workplace health certification, and is only awarded to organizations that show a clear commitment to health promotion measures.

Healthy Place To Work is a global data analytics company providing insight to organizations focused on workplace health and well-being. The company works with an evidence-based approach and carries out certifications of organizations that want to create a healthy organizational culture.

In order to be certified, an organization must engage its employees in a survey, which evaluates the employees' experience of their health and of the organization's health culture. After that, the organization must analyze the results and, based on this, create a health plan together with Healthy Place To Work. Being certified is proof that an organization is perceived as a sustainable workplace by its employees, according to Healthy Place To Work.

Tor Einar Norbakk, CEO of Svenska Aerogel:

– I am very proud of how far our company has come; for several years we have worked with the goal of becoming an attractive employer. This certification reflects our values: team spirit, sustainability, and customer value. Our continuous development work creates value for our employees but also for other stakeholders, such as customers and shareholders.
