Instalco company wins assignment at the new National Archives building

The Instalco company, Kempes El, has been contracted for electrical installations in conjunction with construction of the new National Archives building in Härnösand. The client is Peab, which has been hired by Specialfastigheter for construction of the building. The order value for Instalco is approximately SEK 70 million.

The new National Archives building in Härnösand will be approximately 34,000 sq. m. and it will consist of the archives themselves, along with premises for administration. The main tenants will be the National Archives and Swedish Tax Agency.

Kempes El will be responsible for installation of the electrical, lighting, telecommunications, security, data, and access control systems. The project also involves some design and planning.

"We recently collaborated with Peab on two very successful partnering projects and are happy to have won their confidence again. It is a large building, with not much space around it for storing materials, which means that the logistics will be extra challenging," says Rasmus Ödling, CEO at Kempes El in Kramfors.

The project recently got underway and it will be completed during 2025. The goal is to certify it as a Sustainable Instalco Project.
