PRESS RELEASE

New and expanded deal for Advania

Today Advania Sweden's CEO Tomas Wanselius signed the agreement with Vaxholm City to provide all administrative personnel and municipal schools, with IT equipment and education for digital learning, as well as streamlining daily work.

The agreement lasts two years with the possibility of a further two years extension. More specifically, Advania will deliver:

- Clients with accessories
- Services, image loading, depreciation
- Introductory support for students
- Option for training of educators and other school staff
- Option for training of all administrative staff within the municipality

The agreement includes all administrative staff in the municipality and all school activities including primary and lower secondary school. The operations in the city of Vaxholm span a total of 513 permanent employees, and approximately 1500 students, in September 2017.

"Advania has had a successful partnership with Vaxholm City for several years, providing equipment and education to all municipal schools. The new agreement also entails increased trust, where Advania will provide clients and training for all administrative staff within the municipality. It is a holistic commitment and completely in line with how we want to support Vaxholm in their development of digital learning as well as an efficient daily business," says Tomas Wanselius, CEO Advania Sweden.

"In collaboration with Vaxholm City, we are developing digital learning at school and it is both a matter of strategy and heart for us. More than 50 % of Advania School Partner's employees have a background within school and education and therefore know what challenges and opportunities that teachers and students often face in day-to-day work at school," says Stefan Henriksson, Business Area Manager Advania Skolpartner.
