

DHL Freight co-developing a holistic approach to security with Risk Intelligence A/S

Risk Intelligence A/S ("Risk Intelligence" or the "Company") announces today that the main period of development with DHL Freight (DHL) has concluded and the Risk Intelligence System (LandRisk Logistics) will be rolled out to DHL dispatchers.

DHL have written an interesting post on the developments which you can read here: <https://dhl-freight-connections.com/en/solutions/a-holistic-approach-to-security/>

With the access to LandRisk Logistics, DHL can give their dispatchers the security information they need, right at their fingertips. By enabling the security team to select and deselect approved parking areas and routes it removes any legacy issues of spreadsheet version control. Dispatchers can also see emerging hotspot areas, where cargo crime is surging. Secure parking can be booked with organisations such as Bosch Secure Parking with direct links out of the Risk Intelligence System. The Lane Threat Assessment tool also allows the security team to assist the dispatcher should the plan change, risk rating a huge number of parking areas which may need to be used if the plan changes due to operational issues such as drivers' hours or highway diversions.

CCO of Risk Intelligence, Jim Pascoe, says:

"It is always great to see a client getting news out about our collaborations. We've learnt a lot working with the security professionals at DHL, the specific operational pressures they have and the challenges communicating security information to bus operational staff. Reading the blog post really drives home our shared approach of bringing operations and security together – giving access through a user-friendly interface that enables staff rather than adding more systems to already busy people. Security is everybody's concern, it's even better when it's made easier for them!"
