Comintelli Adds Trusted Market Research Content to Intelligence2day[®]

Comintelli, a leading provider of market and competitive intelligence platforms, today announced the launch of Research and Reports, a new premium content add-on for its Intelligence2day[®] platform.

The new add-on brings trusted market research, industry data, company information, forecasts, and sector analysis directly into Intelligence2day[®]. It enables organizations to combine internal intelligence, external monitoring, and third-party research in one integrated environment.

Research and Reports is designed for organizations that want to strengthen their market understanding, improve weak signal detection, and reduce the time spent searching for reliable external research.

The add-on provides broad coverage across industries, markets, and geographies. Users can access industry reports, market forecasts, sector analysis, company insights, competitive landscapes, consumer and B2B trends, and country-specific market data.

The content is sourced from more than 100,000 trusted open sources across multiple economic sectors. The service uses AI and learning algorithms to continuously monitor, retrieve, structure, and enrich research content from authoritative sources. These include government agencies, international organizations, statistical offices, trade associations, NGOs, consultancies, ministries, embassies, annual reports, and other recognized institutions.

“Trusted information is becoming one of the most important strategic assets in the age of AI. The better data and content you have, the better results AI can deliver. By adding Research and Reports to Intelligence2day[®], we help our customers combine high-quality external research with structured intelligence workflows, so they can identify weak signals earlier and turn insight into competitive advantage,” said Jesper Martell, CEO of Comintelli.

Research and Reports is available today as a premium add-on to Intelligence2day[®].
