

Financial Times recognizes Northmill as one of the fastest growing companies in Europe

- The tech-bank tops the list among Nordic banks

Stockholm 3 March 2020: Financial Times has in its yearly list FT 1000 recognized the Swedish tech bank Northmill as one of the fastest-growing companies in Europe. Northmill ranks at the top among Nordic banks and as number 302 in total. Financial Times' list FT 1000 assesses companies' compounded annual growth rate, headcount and pre-tax profit between 2015 and 2018.

Hikmet Ego, CEO at Northmill commented:

“It is inspiring and a confirmation that we continue to do the right long-term priorities. We have been able to scale up with profitability and grown across all functions of the organization. The recognition is also an acknowledgment of our strong company culture and amazing people that have been crucial in our strong growth journey. With our Swedish banking license, we continue to take important steps towards building a bank that improves everyone’s financial life and helps people save money.”

Northmill plans to keep investing in both the organization and in continued growth. Recently, the tech bank hired a new Chief Product Officer and has in a short period launched both a savings account and one of the best cards on the market with two percent cashback and no fees.
