

BOMILL RECEIVES ADDITIONAL APC ORDER FROM US MALTING GROUP WORTH USD26,000

In collaboration with Bratney, BoMill's distributor in the United States, BoMill has received an additional order for an APC unit worth USD26,000 from a leading global malting group with operations in North America.

In early September, BoMill InSight™ was commissioned at the customer's site in the United States, including operator training and the completion of the Site Acceptance Test. BoMill InSight™, has been in continues operations since commissioning. One APC module was included in the original order and installation. The customer has now ordered a second module to enable monitoring and control of both sorted products, A and B, providing further insights and supporting continued optimization of the operation.

BoMill launched APC (Adaptive Protein Control) in June 2026, and the solution is already in use at several customer sites.

"An additional order from an existing customer is a strong validation of our technology and the value our solutions provide. We are pleased to develop the collaboration and support the customer in optimizing its operations", said Andreas Jeppsson, CEO of BoMill AB.

BoMill is a Swedish grain technology company dedicated to helping the grain industry unlock more value and increase efficiency through precision sorting. Based on patented NIR technology, the BoMill InSight™ platform analyzes and sorts grain at industrial scale according to the internal qualities of each individual kernel, enabling customers to make better use of natural grain variation and unlock value that would otherwise remain hidden within the batch.

With decades of expertise in individual kernel analysis, BoMill serves customers across the grain value chain, including grain handlers, maltsters and flour mills. BoMill AB is headquartered in Malmö, Sweden, and is listed on Nasdaq First North Growth Market under the ticker BOMILL.
