

Foxway CEO Patrick Höijer elected to the EUREFAS Board of Directors

Foxway CEO Patrick Höijer has been elected to the Board of Directors of EUREFAS, the European industry association for the refurbishment and reuse of tech. The appointment strengthens Foxway's ability to contribute to the development of circular tech solutions across Europe.

EUREFAS brings together European companies active in the refurbishment and reuse of tech. The association works to create better conditions for circular business models by promoting common standards, advocating for simplified and harmonized legislation, and strengthening dialogue with EU policymakers.

As a founding member, Foxway has been actively involved in EUREFAS since the association was established. EUREFAS has established a strong voice in advancing circular business models, quality standards, and market development. Through its Board representation, Foxway aims to support and help shape EUREFAS's continued efforts to advance circular tech solutions across Europe.

“Europe is at a crossroads where circular business models need to become an integral part of the economy of the future. Through EUREFAS, we can bring together the industry's expertise and create the conditions needed for sustainable tech solutions to become the first choice for both businesses and consumers,” says Patrick Höijer, CEO of Foxway.

Through its Board representation, Foxway aims to help remove barriers to the reuse and life extension of tech products such as computers and mobiles, while accelerating the transition to a circular economy. Together with fellow member companies, Foxway is working to strengthen the position of sustainable technology solutions in the European market.

About EUREFAS

The European Refurbishment Association (Eurefas) aims to represent the IT refurbishment sector, in particular smartphones, including high-profile companies operating on technology, buyback, refurbishment and sale of second-hand high-tech devices. The association's main mission is to build a circular economy and to advocate and promote the interests of the sector across the European Union. Eurefas is driven by sustainability values and aims to play a significant role in shaping a greener world. Find out more at <http://www.eurefas.com/>
