Diana Pilquist Dances Away the Pain in New Single Four on the Floor – Release February 13

Diana Pilquist’s new track Four on the Floor is driven by a steady, pulsing groove that evokes late nights, sweaty club floors, and the feeling of trying to dance away something that runs deeper than you’d like to admit. It’s a song for anyone who knows what it’s like to look perfectly fine on the surface while being far from done on the inside.

With Four on the Floor, Diana Pilquist continues to build on her distinctive pop sound, blending elements of disco, soul, and funk, and drawing from an emotional spectrum that stretches from sorrow to euphoria. Despite the melancholy and pain lingering beneath the lyrics, the song sets the stage for a joyful explosion on the dance floor – carried by the relentless drive of the kick drum in a classic “four on the floor” beat.

“The song revolves around the moment when you should have moved on. Your friends have dragged you out onto the dance floor, the music is pounding, the lights are blinding. Everything points to a fun night to remember. And yet, your thoughts are somewhere else. You wish it were over, that you didn’t care about that person anymore – even as his name echoes in your head with every beat of the music. But you keep dancing, because it’s all you can do,” says Diana Pilquist.

Four on the Floor will be released on all digital platforms on February 13. To experience the song live, you can also catch Diana Pilquist in concert at Potatisen in Gothenburg on the same day, from 8–10 PM (see restaurang-potatisen.se).
