Boss Design unveils complementary seating duo Peek and Boo

Echoing the transition that is currently taking place in the work place - moving from traditional ways of working to environments that support and promote flexibility and nomadic working patterns - leading British designer and manufacturer, Boss Design, announces the launch of Peek and Boo.

Designed in-house, Peek and Boo are available as one-piece or two-piece units that can be used independently to create private spaces in open plan environments, or alongside each other to enhance collaborative working. Complete with a swivel base and felt pads, this sublime duo of excellence boasts luxury and contemporary styling. They are ideally suited to the prevailing workspace and a wide range of locations.

Peek and Boo successfully combine handcrafted quality with the very latest thinking in seating innovation and ergonomics. Offering the user an unparalleled level of comfort, the seat and back are constructed from timber frame and CMHR foam, as well as fixed lumbar cushion and a sprung seat.

In addition to the standard offer, Peak and Boo can be adapted to suit individual specification with a choice of any fabric or leather for the seat and lumbar, complete with twin stitching detail. Meanwhile, the Peek screen can also be upholstered in any fabric.

Design Director at The Boss Design Group, Mark Barrell comments: "We are excited to reveal this dynamic duo. Reflecting the change towards a comfortable, informal working environment where single person work booths are the norm, we are confident that Peak and Boo will become a popular addition to the office arena."

Perfectly compatible with Boss Design's height-adjustable Flamingo table, the duo complements other contemporary products creating the option of a private or open plan environment. This new addition to Boss Design's portfolio creates a significant milestone for the leading company with elegance; comfort and individuality demonstrating master upholstery and state of the art design.
