

The television series Svenska Bönder returns for a second season

It has now been confirmed that the series will return for a second season. Filming is already underway, and next year viewers will once again follow some of the people behind Swedish food production.

The series gives audiences a unique opportunity to experience the realities of modern farming in Sweden, covering everything from crop cultivation and livestock production to entrepreneurship, family life, and the challenges and opportunities facing the industry. Svenska Bönder offers a close-up view of the work behind Swedish food production and highlights both the rewards and the complexities of running a farm in today's Sweden.

The new season will feature several well-known farms from the first season, while also welcoming four new farms. Together, they will showcase grain farms, dairy production, and beef production, providing a broad and authentic picture of Swedish agriculture.

For Lantmännen, Svenska Bönder is an important way to increase understanding of agriculture's role in society and to highlight the work that goes into producing the food on our tables. The series offers a glimpse into life on Swedish farms and shines a light on farmers' dedication, expertise, and vital contribution to Sweden's food supply.

Returning and new farms in season two

The following farms will return in the upcoming season:

- Arvid and Tove Lindgren, Tullgarns Kungsgård, Vagnhärad
- Johan and Björn Daniels, Hansjö Gård, Orsa
- Sara Staffare Granqvist and Carl Johan Granqvist Staffare, Bredsjö Gård, Hällefors

Four new farms will also join the series:

- Martina Schagerlund, Lindholms Gård, Barva
- Cousins Hanna Ottosson and Rasmus Jakobsson, together with brothers Kent, Göte and Olle Jakobsson, Guterud Gård, Säffle
- Billy and Johanna Nord, Grötom Lantbruk, Grötom
