

IN NO TIME AT ALL

In the highly-anticipated sequel to Time for Tanechka, Arty and Tatiana find themselves struggling with time travel once again

Following the success of his debut novel Time for Tanechka, N. A. Millington explores more historical events in the thrilling sequel In No Time At All that sees Arty and Tatiana team up once again to travel through time and rescue the Parchment of Life.

N. A. Millington first began writing when he received a book on the last Tsar of Russia, which sparked his imagination about Russian history. In the sequel to Time for Tanechka, Tatiana, a Grand Duchess of 1918 Imperial Russia, sets out in a race against time to beat the incomparable Winston Peabody, part-time cat burglar and jewel thief, part-time Dean of a very famous college in Lancashire. Winston has been assigned by the Masters Club the seemingly impossible task of finding and rescuing the mysterious Parchment of Life, a religious relic so important that whoever possesses it would have complete control over the whole of humanity. There are two magical egg timers that are capable of transporting their handlers through time. After using one of the egg timers, Winston and his accomplice Charles Henry Smith, are unwittingly forced to experience many unpleasant and even nightmarish situations in order to fulfil Peabody's own dark desires and those of the enigmatic Masters Club.

'There is a never ending interest in the last Imperial family of Russia,' explains N. A. Millington, 'and through my novels, history is brought to life!'
