Market Commentary

- Summary: During October, geopolitical tensions, AI-related speculation and fiscal concerns weighed on risk assets. European securitised markets were not immune, with spreads widening suddenly and sharply across all segments over the month. Primary volumes remained healthy at €19bn and, notably, secondary activity rose significantly, with BWIC volumes reaching €2.6bn in ABS and over €2bn in CLOs. In ABS, this marked the busiest period of the year, driven by one asset manager in particular selling credit broadly to fund digital infrastructure debt commitments. The additional supply weighed on spreads, most notably in AAA UK ABS, with UK prime RMBS 10bp wider on the month. AAA CLO spreads were more stable, widening by just 5bp. Whilst dealer liquidity remained strong, it understandably became more expensive as caution grew.
- ABS: European ABS issuance continued in October despite more challenging market conditions, with €14bn priced across a diverse range of jurisdictions and asset classes. Spreads widened across sectors; however, AAA UK RMBS clearly underperformed, reflecting the characteristics of its buyer base. For example, Vida Bank priced the AAA tranche of its latest RMBS at SONIA+0.97%, close to 0.2% wider than comparable prints in September. Demand was stronger for European ABS, where Mercedes-Benz priced AAA bonds at Euribor+0.48%, with the deal close to two times oversubscribed. Spreads stabilised towards month-end, as market participants supported wider levels. However, given broader market dynamics, we think it unlikely that spreads will retrace to the year-to-date tights seen in September.
- CLOs: Global CLO primary markets remained active in October. European issuance reached €13.2bn, including €4.6bn of new issue supply, while the US market was also active, with $36bn of issuance, including $10.53bn of new issue supply. Spreads were initially stable in CLO markets, a testament to strong global demand, but as AI scepticism continued, we saw repricing, particularly in high-yield tranches. New issue AAA spreads held at around 125bp, while secondary spreads were range-bound between 1.25% and 1.30% over Euribor. The European loan index fell 2 points in October, driven mostly by declines in distressed credits, which increased dispersion across the index. As expected, this has led to greater tiering in CLO liabilities, particularly in resets, where pricing ranged from Euribor+5.1% to 6.4% at the end of the period. We expect volatility to persist into year-end and, as a result, tiering to remain and spreads to be range-bound over the medium term.

Portfolio Commentary

October was an active month for the Fund. In CLOs, the portfolio managers (PMs) continued to add BB US CLOs at SOFR+5.5%, increasing diversification across the CLO holdings. In Europe, the team added discounted BB profiles at Euribor+6.5%, which offer significant call upside. In ABS, the team added BB UK consumer risk at SONIA+3.5%. These purchases were funded by rotating out of AAA CLOs, where spreads have been insulated from broader spread weakness. Gearing remained unchanged over the month.

Market Outlook and Strategy

Despite broader market volatility, European securitised markets continue to perform well, supported by significant carry in a higher-for-longer environment. The PMs expect supply to continue into November, although volumes may undershoot forecasts, with some issuers preferring to delay funding plans into 2027, given market conditions. Collateral performance has remained broadly resilient; however, the PMs remain cautious on consumer sentiment and therefore favour secured collateral from established lenders. Geopolitical concerns, AI caution and fiscal gridlock look set to persist into year-end, with no clear catalyst for stability. As such, they expect spreads to remain range-bound, with steeper credit curves, which should create opportunities for the Funds.
